SHELTON SELECTED FOR PARTICIPATION IN NATIONAL DEMONSTRATION PROJECT

Shelton State Community College has been selected as one of 148 colleges across the United States to participate in a national demonstration project designed to strengthen the skills of volunteers serving as board members of nonprofit organizations.

The "Building Better Boards for Community Organizations" project, with financial assistance from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, was initially piloted by seven community colleges serving as demonstration centers. Under the guidance of a national advisory committee, the project has provided a variety of board development services -- including courses on such topics as fundraising and financial management, legal liabilities of boardsmanship, board/staff relations, board recruitment, and conducting effective meetings. Additional colleges were then recruited and selected to replicate the demonstration centers' services and to design additional programs to meet individual community needs.

As a participating college, Shelton will organize a community advisory committee, conduct a board development needs assessment, and offer several programs for volunteer board members. Project coordinators for the Building Better Boards program at Shelton State are Lucy Kubiszyn and Dr. Dave Freeman.
